A Grand Tribute from the Living to the Dead. As a specimen of how grand a tribute car be paid by the living to the dead, and of the beauties of the English language, we give the speech made in the United States Senate by Senator John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, on the death of Senator "Ben" Hill, of problems of mortal life and human destiny, which prompted the troubled patriarch to ask that momentous question for which the centuries have given no answer—"If a man die shall he live again?"

Every man is the center of a circle whose fatal circumference he cannot pass. Within its narrow confines he is potential; beyond it he perishes, and if immortality be a spiendid but delissive dream, if the incompleteness of every career, even the longest and most fortunate, be not supplemented and perfected after its termination here, then he who dreads to die sheuld fear to live, for life is a tragedy more desolate and inexplicable than death.

Of all the dead whose obsequies we have paused to solemnize in this chamber I recall no one whose untimely fate seems to lamentable, and yet so rich in prophecy of eternal life, as that of Senator Hill. He had reached the maridian of his years. He stood upon the high plateau of middle life, in that serene atmosphere where temptation no longer assalls, where the clamorous passions no more distract, and where the conditions are most favorable for noble and enduring achievement. His unward tion no longer assails, where the clamorous passions no more distract, and where the conditions are most favorable for noble and enduring achievement. His upward path had been through stormy adversity and contention, such as infrequently falls to the lot of men. Though not without the tendency to meditation, reverie, and introspection which accompanies genius, his temperment was palestric. He was competitive and unpeaceful. He was born a polemic and controversialist, intellectually pugnacious and combative, so that he was impelled to defend any position that might be assailed or to attack any position that might be intrenched, not because the demight be intreached, not because the defeuse or the assault were essential, but because the positions were maintained and that those who held them became by that fact alone his adversaries. This tendency of his nature made his orbit erratic rather than planetary, and flashed with irregular splendor rather than shone with steady and penetrating rays. His advocacy of any cause was fearless to the verge of temerity, He appeared to be indifferent to applause or censure for their own sake. He accepted intrepidly any conclusions that he reached, without inquiring whether they were politic or expedient.

To such a spirit partisanship was unavoidable, but with Senator Hill it did not degenerate into bigotry. He was capable of broad generosity, and extended to his opponents the same unreserved candor which he demanded for himself. His might be intrenched, not because the de-

He was too intense, too earnest, to employ the cheap and paltry decorations of discourse. He never reconnoitered a hostile position nor approached it by stealthy parallels. He could not lay slege to an 'nemy, nor beleaguer him, nor open trenches, and sap and mine. His method was the charge and the onset. He was the Murat of senatorial debate. Not many men of this generation have been better equipped for parliamentary warfare than he, with his commanding presence, his equipped for parliamentary warfare than he, with his commanding presence, his sinewy diction, his conddent and imper-turbable self-control.

But in the maturity of his powers and But in the maturity of his powers and his fame, with unmeasured opportunities for achievement apparently before him, with great designs unaccomplished, surrounded by the proud and affectionate solicitude of a great constituency, the pallid messenger with the inverted torch beckoned him to depart. There are few scenes in his tory more tragic than that protracted combat with death. No man had greater inducements to live. But in the loar struggle against the inexorable advances of an gle against the inexorable advances of an ous and mortal malady he did not falinstitute to replie. He retreated with the aspect of a victor, and though he succumbed, he seemed to conquer. His sun went flown at noon, but it sank amid the prophetic splenders of an eternal dawn. With more than a heard sources with more than a marry's a hero's courage, with more than a martyr's fortitude, he waited the approach of the in-evitable hour and went to the undiscovered

COURT ROOM MARRIAGE.

A Virginia Couple Joined in the Bonds of Matrimony.

Counselor Ed B. Hay, always prompt to assist the distressed or aid those in need of help, was in his glory yesterday. Frederick E. Campbell and Ellen Virginia Evans, a young couple from Alexandria county, Va., accompanied by a lady friend, visited the court house and secured a license to marry. After the certificate had been issued it was evident that something further was wanted, and it was at this moment Mr. Hay's accommodating spirit was availed of. He inquired of the couple if a minister was not needed, and they informed him that the services of one at that time would prove very acceptable. The bridal party was shown into the couple in search of a E. Campbell and Ellen Virginia Evans, a Hay in the meantime going in search of a clergyman. He returned with Rev. Mr. Wright, of Wesley Chapel, who in a very few minutes toined the party in wedlock in the presence of many witnesses, also subsequently congratulating them upon their new life.

Bold Attempt to Shoot a Young Woman.

William Moore, colored, who has served seven years in the reform school, attempted to kill a young colored woman named Annie Hickman at 7:30 o'clock yeaterday morning by firing several pistol shots at her near St. Patrick's Cemetery. The weapon used belonged to the woman, which M ore took from her. Officer Slack heard the shots while driving along the road in his buggy, and got up in time to see Moore firing at the fleeling woman. The officer drew his pistol on Moore, who threw up his hands and surrendered. Judge Snell yesterday fined Moore $50 or ninety days for carrying concealed weapon, and also gave him 364 days in jail for the assault on the woman. to kill a young colored woman named Apple Commissioner Colman and Mr. Switzler, of the bureau of statistics, accompanied the party. They extended to the President and Mrs. Cleveland an invitation to visit St. Louis next fall, and this in fisself was a thing of beauty. It was contained in a large and elegantly bound book with carved wooden covers, the carvings representing the great bridge and the priocipal municipal buildings of St. Louis. The clasp and edges of the book are of solid silver, bearing the initials "G. C." The invitation is beautifully engrussed on sath, and is signed by over 20,000 persons.

Mayor Francia, on behalf of the delegation, made a short address, saying that while the people of St. Louis would be gird and honored to receive a visit from the President at any time, it would probably afford them greater pleasure if he could arrange to be in St. Louis during the Grand Army encampment in September next. The committee, he said, desired to supplement the invitation of the Grand Army men, but if the President could not come during their encampment, they would like him to come whenever he found it convenient, and they would assure him a warm welcome.
